

Trio Dhoore re-opens the revitalised Sydling Village Hall

On a wet and windy Sunday night the charming Flemish folk musicians, the brothers Trio Dhoore ripped through their latest and appropriately named album August at the Village Hall in the picturesque Dorset village of Sydling St Nicholas. The band is much praised and featured by BBC Folk music programmes as they forge their path creating their own original compositions in a traditional vein.

The recently refurbished hall presented the band with perfect acoustics and they made the most of it having the audience of over 150 on their feet with applause at the end of their energetic set which featured an unusual mix of squeezebox, hurdy-gurdy and guitar in complete harmony.

The band were enjoying themselves as much as the audience and they stayed around with their new fans signing records and enjoying the beer at the end of the evening at this intimate venue.

The brothers are firm favourites on the festival circuit and are currently on a wide ranging tour of European venues. Tonight's appearance in Sydling was arranged and funded by Dorset Artsreach who do such a wonderful job in bringing such wide ranging talents to the Dorset countryside.
